

OBJECTIVE

As a representative of 3 different organisations with the youth involvement, and as an active volunteer, I believe I have a great experience to share.

I do some volunteer work in educational field (this year we are holding the 3rd Annual Conference on SDGs in Sevastopol, and some related events), and also I am campaigning for the sustainable use of water.

In December 2018 I took part in the Sustainable Development Goals Youth Forum in Moscow. With all the youth envoys we signed a declaration and established the Association of the SDGs Youth Ambassadors. From the beginning I take active part in all the initiatives of our association.

CONTACTS

 nataliejohn2528@gmail.com

 +7 978 807 2440

 Sevastopol, Crimea, Russia

The only constant thing in the world is change. Humans grow and evolve, and so does the world around them. Nowadays, as political and economic systems are changing too fast, providing instability and a lack of certainty into the society, the question arises: what our future will be like? What kind of world will our children be living in? For now, we should think ahead — how can we provide our world's sustainable development, to make sure all the changes we cause are only for the best.

Despite all the global conflicts and a growing discrepancy our age is also the age of dialogue and negotiation. Not only dialogue between politicians or senior officials, but rather communication and views exchange among socially active groups. Involvement of active youth leaders is vital for the international cooperation aimed at achieving Sustainable Development Goals «Think global, act local» — is the motto that best fits our agenda. Engagement of young people in cultural and educational programmes has a profound effect on developing the understanding of the SDGs, which builds a solid foundation for the development of their own projects, conducted at the local level. Through face-to-face communication, substantive discussions and exchanging opinions we not only gain knowledge and first-hand experience, but also a wide range of active and sustainable connections and networks. Therefore we will be capable of developing our own projects, involving more people, and then it will allow us to share this experience. Everything we do is a volunteering work, but I am confident that we can involve more and more people eager to make this world a better place. I have a lot of volunteering experience myself, and I must say this is a great constituent of one's development and personal growth.

In December 2018 I took part in the Sustainable Development Goals Youth Forum in Moscow. With all the youth envoys we signed a declaration and established the Association of SDGs Youth Ambassadors in order to exchange information about ongoing projects and to prepare the annual report for the special presidential representative on climate issues. This will be a great experience to share with our foreign friends during this winter school, and I believe that by collecting such successful cases and mechanisms we can achieve more and do better!