

Name: Kim Sunggeon

University : Kazan Federal University

Major: Russian literature

-Essay-

Life Below Water: Duty to Individuals, Society, and the World for the Ocean

One of the most important resources in modern times is the ocean. It provides us with many benefits such as sea food, petroleum resources, material for medicine and so on. Even the ocean plays a role not only as a way for trade or travel but also as a regulator of climate on the earth. In that way the ocean gives us lots of things and has a huge effect on our life.

However, we overlooked the preciousness of the ocean for too much time. Ecosystem under the sea was destroyed by human's activities like the excessive exploitation of resources and waste disposal, including the disposal of chemical, industrial and even radioactive wastes. Experts give a strict warning of an environmental crisis of the ocean pollution and urge that people must effort to find a solution to the ocean pollution for sustainable development of the ocean resources. And this problem can be discussed with various aspects: individual, social and global aspects.

Firstly, each person should strive for the protection of the ocean. Though one person exercises very tiny influence, he can do something immediately, certainly, concretely, while it takes a long time to enact a new law. He can use a tumbler at a cafe not a paper cup, refrain from using plastic goods such as a straw, a plastic bag and so on.

Secondly, the social environment is also important for solving the present ocean problems. Politicians can propose new law about the environmental protection of the ocean or about the education for children. The press is able to make useful programs about the problems in the ocean and its dangerousness. And even some companies nowadays tend to become eco-friendly.

Thirdly, it is necessary that not only one society but also every country takes care of the ocean. Because the sea flows around the world, it means that the problems of the sea influence on all countries. Therefore representatives from all over the world should gather together and discuss regularly.

In conclusion, people in these days are facing with the issue of ocean pollution. It must be resolved for human beings and whole ecosystem by the individual, the society and even all countries in the world.